The weather has again cooled and the art world is settling in for the winter. We recommend a film noir-tinged exhibition in Chelsea to reflect the current starkness of the city, a marathon reading of Gertrude Stein's modernist and present participle-heavy "The Making of Americans" in Greenpoint, an ambitious Arthurian gallery-opera on the Lower East Side, a dialogue between two intrepid artists who examine violence and sex on (appropriately) the Bowery, a subterranean art show that crawls beneath Long Island City with performance and sculptures, and then see what's "on the radar." So head out and find a good bar for a post-art hot toddy. See you on the streets!

OPENINGS/EVENTS

SUN 01/20 "Double Life" at Sculpture Center, 44-19 Purves Street, Long Island City, Ongoing with Performance at 3 pm

This group show winding through the center's subterranean space has work by artists bridging performance and sculpture. Go between 3 and 6 on Sunday to see Bryan Zanisnik perform live with his father, Bob. — SR
